Safety Notice

The tragic death of a young man at Put in Bay this past week end brings to focus the possible danger of people being in the water near boats. The probable cause of the death was E S D or electrical shock drowning. This can happen when a boat's AC electrical system malfunctions in some way and is leaking current into the water. It only takes 15 mA (miila amps) of current to cause loss of muscle control and results in drowning. This is the reason there is NO swimming in the marina nor any other water activity. Bay Point is working on ways to safe guard the electrical systems and is developing a method to help members test their boats for current loss.
